

Radar Alerts for Institutions

How Exchanges, Regulators, and Index Providers Monitor
Market Events & Rumors

Overview

Radar Alerts monitor news on 100,000+ public and private companies across all global markets. The system collects, filters, and summarizes reports from thousands of business sites in 28 languages, including 100 global stock-exchange press wires, regulatory filings, and investment social media. Users receive scheduled AI-generated summaries around themes and watchlists of interest, with links back to original sources. Radar Alerts is currently deployed at some of the largest global exchanges, regulatory bodies, and index providers.

The Radar Process

- 1. Collection: News, social media, and official exchange announcements are obtained in real-time from global sources.
- 2. Translation & Mapping: All are translated into English, companies, cryptocurrencies, people, products, and other assets are identified and mapped to universal IDs.
- 3. Client Filters: References to user-defined topics such as price manipulation, insider activity, merger activity, and trading halts are identified in each sentence and selected for further analysis.
- 4. Summarization: AI examines the selection of relevant sentences and produces short updates with links back to the key source articles.
- 5. Delivery: Alerts and daily digests are available via dashboard, email, and API.

Stock Exchanges

Stock exchanges apply Radar Alerts to support market integrity teams. Use cases include:

- Reports on financial instability among listed companies, counterparties, or the financial sector as a whole.
- Detecting pre-announcement leaks or rumors before official filings
- Tracking company-specific news that may justify trading suspensions or disclosures.
- Monitoring social-media discussions for emerging risks.

Exchanges integrate the alerts into their surveillance systems, ensuring timely visibility.

Implementation

Clients may use a self-service model or define their unique topic lists, company universes, and alert frequency for the MarketPsych team to implement into filters. The team configures the feed and summary format. Delivery occurs via email, API, or dashboard integration. This customized system can be updated based on user feedback, and as new topics or markets are added.

Client Outcomes

The value-add of Radar Alerts is reduced time to detect material news or rumors, broader visibility across global sources, lower reliance on manual searches and Google Alerts, and a clear audit trail linking each summary to original sources.

Conclusion

Radar Summaries and Radar Alerts give exchanges, regulators, and index providers a direct, automated way to track material company events and rumors across global media. The system improves awareness of market-moving information and supports faster, evidence-based responses to potential manipulation, halts, or mergers.
